ROANOKE, VA., SEPTEMBER 18, 1892.

THE MUSICAL SOCIETY.

As a preliminary to the projected society, which the music lovers of Roanoke have in view to establish, it will not be amiss for all persons interested in the upbuilding of Roanoke, whether musically inclined or not, to view from a business standpoint the benefits which such an organization would bring to our city.

Undoubtedly the thousands of visitors who heard the magnificent Decennial Concert, were deeply impressed with Roanoke as a musical center. These impressions naturally find utterance and advertisers to their hearers an attractive city for visitors. Therefore, it behooves the good people of Roanoke to encourage in every possible way the efforts of our musical friends to supply the city with an organization capable of inaugurating a series of musical festivals that would bring it into flattering prominence as an attractive resort and abiding place.

HOLD IT DOWN.

The cholera is being held within bounds in New York city, and if the present good fortune holds another week should stamp it out. The number of cases on the cholera infected vessels at Fire Island is diminishing rapidly and but few new ones are appearing.

The danger is not over, however, nor lessening, nor will it until the disease has run its course in Europe and again disappeared. Europe is certain to have a recurrence next spring of the cholera, and a year of increasing vigilance will be necessary to keep it out of America.
In all probability foreign exhibits and foreign attendance at the World's Fair will be seriously curtailed by this trouble, but we can stand their absence better than the cholera's presence.

THE SLANDERERS.

There is a small group of people in Roanoke who delight greatly in originating slanders and a large group who delight in giving them currency. There is nothing more worthy of public condemnation than this habit of talking disparagingly of other people. It betrays minds of small calibre in possession of those people who can find nothing better to do than slander the innocent.

SCENERY OF "THE SOUDAN."

The Stage Setting of a Modern Spectacular Drama.

From the Boston Herald.

"Attention!"
"Shoulder arms!"
"Order arms!"
"Stand at ease!"
Such were the orders that Stage Manager Lawrence McCarty addressed to his army of soldiers on the stage of the Boston theater Saturday afternoon, just before the curtain went up for the fourth act of "The Soudan," one of the greatest acts ever seen on any stage.
The men went through the drill as ordered.

Turning to a Herald reporter, who had been pleased at the opportunity according to see how "The Soudan" was staged, Mr. McCarty said: "Ten years ago all would have held up their hands at the idea of staging a play like 'The Soudan.' 'The Exiles' was a great production in its day, but it is not to be compared with 'The Soudan' in any respect. 'The Exiles' is a child's play as compared with this production. In fact, I think that 'The Soudan' is the greatest play ever put upon the stage. The Boston theatre version is superior to that given at the Drury Lane Theatre in London.

We were seven months at work on the scenery for the play. A great deal of the work is papier mache, and the results were very satisfactory. Look at the second scene in act 3. It is one of the finest sets ever attempted anywhere, and by far the most elaborate over set in this country, if not in the world. The inn on the right side is entirely made of papier mache. This inn is 19 feet high and 24 feet long. It has a balcony and a dormer window, and is elaborately trimmed with vines. On the left of the scene is the parsonage, also an elaborate set and a cross bow.

All of these pieces are in sections, for they must be cut down to a width of 5 feet 10 inches, so as to be easily transported when the company is on the road, and when this takes place all the scenery now used in the play will be taken along. The sets are very heavy indeed.
The work on the stage setting may be imagined when it is stated that all of the scenes are deep ones, and there is no boy's play in making the changes.
There is no small scene shown in the whole play and then a big one, so as to give time for the latter while the former is going on, as is generally the case in settings for these great melodramas.

"Yes, you can say that 'The Soudan' is the king of them all. We employ 35 men to handle the scenery, and our usual complement is 10. In the Trafalgar square scene there are 350 people on the stage, not including the stage hands, so you see that there are over 400 souls back of the footlights at that time. We make eight changes in the darkness, and when I say 'darkness,' I mean that it is just as dark to us behind the scenes as to those in the audience. I could not see my hand two feet in front of my face.
We have not had a single hitch in the setting under such circumstances since the play began its run. Many rehearsals brought about this remarkable record.
I suppose that I went over my part of the production thirty times, and I rehearsed it just two weeks; and one night we rehearsed the scenery alone from 7 in the evening until 2:30 the next morning.

"There is another great change in the third scene in the second act. From Nellie's retreat the audience is conducted to Stonefield farm, with a big house on the right, a wood hut on the left, and a large log in the centre, where the boys play. The writer timed this change, and a stop watch showed that it required just 27 seconds from the time that the lights went out until they were relighted.

"It took but 13 seconds to pass from the camp scene, the 'za ebs,' to the interior of the Arab city. Here is another very heavy scene. There is a wall on the right, which is very heavily constructed, as the soldiers leap upon it and on to the stage eight or ten at a time. Then there is a gate, represented to appear nine inches thick. Its height is 25 feet. On the left are two houses with canopies and awnings. These canopies and awnings are made to fold flat.
The wall is used again in the Trafalgar square scene, and becomes a part of the base of the monument."

PIANOS and organs warranted five years at Hobbie Music Co., 157 Salem avenue.

The Case Was Postponed.

Capt. Geo. McH. Gish returned yesterday morning from Lynchburg, where he was counsel for Simpson, the Fin-castle postmaster, who was charged with stealing money from registered letters. The case was postponed until the United States court convenes again in Lynchburg.

Harry's Turn Now.

Johnny, aged four, and Harry, aged five, had been left at home with their sister, mother having gone out.

When bedtime came they wanted to stay up for mother and it was hard work to get them to bed. Harry maintained a stolid indifference, but Johnny cried lustrily.

Their sister listened at the bottom of the stairs, hoping that they would soon be good.

At last Johnny stopped and the listener heard him say:

"You cry, Harry. I'm tired."—Boston

Some of Flossie's Fancies.

Flossie went down to the seaside in June, and the first day she saw the bathers from the hotel window she shouted to her mother:

"Oh, mamma, come and see the people in God's big bathtub."

In the hotel where she was stopping she took a fancy to riding in the elevator, and she nearly worried the life out of the elevator boy ringing him up.
One day he was not in a very pleasant frame of mind after about the seventh trip, and she noticed it.

"Well," she said to him, with an air of apology, "I suppose you think I ought to own a machine of my own."

With her father and mother she went by sea to New York from a point in Virginia, leaving in the evening. The next morning they were out of sight of land for the first time in her experience.
Her father had taken her on deck, and she looked all around the waste of water for a minute or two, and then she remarked, in a tone of considerable surprise:

"My goodness, papa, it must have rained very hard last night."—Detroit Free Press.

Thoughtlessness.

Farmer Simpson was an exceedingly mild natured man and would find excuses for the shortcomings of his neighbors, for the faults of his horses and, in fact, for every unpleasant thing that came in his way. He purchased a cow and had great difficulty in keeping her in the pasture.

"She's kind of a rovin critter, but she means well," he said, after a walk of several miles in pursuit of her.

One morning he was milking the cow, when she began to kick violently, upset the stool, sent the pail flying and all the milk was spilled.

The farmer got up, and contemplating the ruin said gravely to a witness of the disaster:

"Well, now that's the worst fault this cow has."

Then after a moment's meditation, feeling that perhaps he had been unnecessarily severe, he added, "That is, if you can call it a fault; maybe it's only thoughtlessness."—Youth's Companion.

Hot Weather Hints.

If a person afflicted with sunstroke be struck a sharp blow in the neck with a club he will often revive sufficiently to make an antemortem statement.

In case of fire get out of the house as soon as possible. The artificial heat is apt to throw one into a perspiration, in which condition one becomes very susceptible to colds.

A mustard colored umbrella, with a wet towel about the head, is as good as anything to wear on the street during hot weather. The umbrella is especially trying on the nerves of horses and is quite efficacious in dispelling the dull lassitude which is likely to brood over the world at such a time.—Detroit Tribu-une.

Vermont's Verdict on an Incident Full of Joy for Democrats.

From the Rochester (N. Y.) Herald.
The Republican press will, of course, affect to treat lightly the Republic in loss of nine thousand in Vermont.
Nevertheless, it marks the flow of an ugly anti-Republican current. A loss of thirty-three and a third per cent. in the plurality of a Republican stronghold in New England in a Presidential year when so many States are reckoned doubtful is an incident full of joy for the Democrats and full of dread for their opponents.
